When it comes to cellphones, your choices are virtually limitless.

You can get basic phones, MP3 phones, Palm based phones, colour phones and just about everything else short of space phone. If your taste runs for the slimmer stuff though, you just can't go wrong with the Sanyo SCP 6000.

Weighing in at super model lithe 65 grams and only 9.9 mm thick, the Sanyo SCP-6000 is about three shades short of being two dimensional. Despite its size, though, the SCP-6000 still manages to cram in all the features you'd expect from a newer model.

It sports a back-lit adjustable LCD with animation options, voice dial, voice memos, Web access, downloadable images and ringtones, basic PDA software and an address book with enough space for 500 phone numbers, 300 e-mail addresses and 300 Web site URLs.

The Sanyo SCP 6000 runs on Telus' 1900 MHz CDMA network and sells for $199 with activation credits. You can check out the full feature list and specs on-line.
