Once you've coughed up the money for the coolest in handheld tech, the very first thing you should do, after wiping up the drool, is protect the screen.

For many of the handhelds out there, a replacement for a scratched screen starts to rival the cost of replacing the unit. As such, there is a variety of screen protectors out there and they are well worth the money. They all consist of a plastic film that sticks to your handheld's screen, providing additional cushioning and allowing you to write and tap on it without fear of damage.

Although there are many of these on the market, only the SOLOvision also kicks in the added benefit of security. The protective film also prevents users from viewing your PDA screen from the side, so no worries about someone glancing over from the adjoining seat to see what you're up to. Anyone who's looking from an angle only sees a shiny green lock-and-chain design reminiscent of the Matrix movie.
